Disability

Defining a disabled person: a person has a disability if she he has a physical or mental impairment which has a substantial and long-term adverse effect on his/her ability to carry out normal day-to-day activities. People who have had disabilities in the past are included.

Impairment: covers physical and mental impairment (excluding mental illness and behavioural problems) including learning disabilities and hearing and sight impairments.

Substantial adverse effect: something which is more than a minor or a trivial effect and is beyond the normal differences in ability which exist among people.

Long-term effect: one which has lasted or is likely to last for at least 12 months or for the rest of the life of the person. Therefore, loss of mobility due to a broken leg which is likely to heal within 12 months or a long term illness which a person is likely to recover from within 12 months are not included.

Substantial effects of a disability which has ceased but is expected to recur at least once a year, for example rheumatoid arthritis or epilepsy, are included in the definition.

Normal day-to-day activities: those carried out by most people on a fairly regular and frequent basis. It does not include activities that are normal only for a particular person or group of people such as playing musical equipment or a sport to a professional standard or performing skilled or specialist tasks at work.

An impairment has a substantial adverse effect if it affects:

- Mobility
- manual dexterity
- physical co-ordination
- continence
- ability to lift, carry or otherwise move everyday objects
- speech, hearing or eyesight (excluding people who wear spectacles)
- Memory or ability to concentrate, learn or understand.

Severe disfigurement; is included without any need to demonstrate that the impairment has a substantial adverse effect on ability to carry out normal day-to-day activities.

Progressive illness: such as cancer, multiple sclerosis, HIV infection and muscular dystrophy are included from the moment the condition leads to an impairment which affects day-to-day activities.

Access requirements; these may include, for example, requirements relating to physical accessibility of the workplace, accessibility to information in different forms etc.
